The Hills Group update on business continuity and national restrictions relating to Coronavirus

Government guidance has confirmed that waste management operations are of critical importance and that quarrying and construction activities are essential to keep the country operating.

I have called on all Hills' employees to once again pull together as we face this next period of uncertainty and thank them all for their contribution to ensuring the company as a whole is able to work and operate safely and continue to deliver essential waste services, construction material and family homes to our customers and the wider public.

If we collectively heed Government guidance over the current period of national restrictions, along with the expanding vaccination programme, it will hopefully mean that we can look forward to an easing of restrictions and a start on a pathway back to normality.

Hills remains firmly committed to providing a safe working environment for all employees, and all our operating sites are COVID-19 secure. Our Group board and management teams continue to meet regularly to ensure our business continuity plans remain adaptable to the latest changes being experienced whilst being mindful of long term resilience and potential future situations. Updates on each of our operational divisions can be found on the relevant websites at:
